WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A deep low pressure trough over Northern California this morning will move into the Great Basin tonight. Occasional rain and high elevation snow will continue today, mainly in northern and eastern areas. A few lingering showers will continue in the same areas Friday. Rainfall amounts could reach 0.50-1.00 inches today, with only light amounts Friday. Snow levels are 5000-6000 ft. in the north and 6000-7000 ft. near Lake Tahoe. Temperatures will be 15-20 degrees below normal and humidity remain above 25%, even in the driest inland areas. Winds will become NW-NE with gusts to 20-25 mph in wind-prone areas this afternoon.

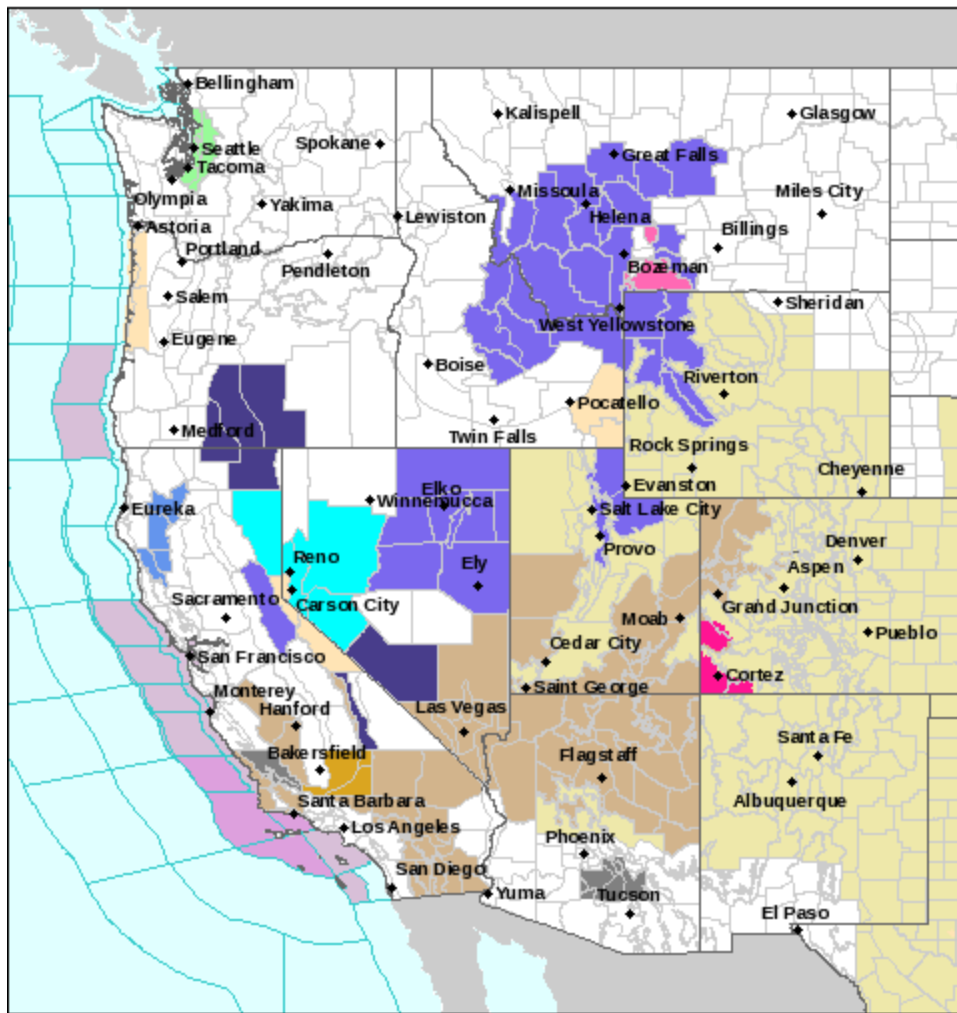

Winds will become N-NE Friday as the trough slowly moves east and high pressure over the Pacific begins to build onshore. The high pressure will produce a drying and warming trend throughout the region this weekend and early next week. N-NE and occasional offshore surface winds will enhance the drying and warming trend from the lower western Cascade-Sierra slopes to the coast. Peak gusts will be 20-30 mph in and around the Sacramento Valley Sunday through Tuesday, with relative humidity (RH) dropping to 10-20% during the afternoons in affected areas. Overnight RH recovery will be poor in these areas. By Monday and Tuesday critical fire weather and fuel conditions can be expected in the Sacramento Valley and surrounding foothills, with smaller parts of the Mid Coast and Bay Area also seeing critical conditions.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A front will sweep through the district today, bringing strong winds and light rain showers during the afternoon. Gusty west winds of 30-45 mph with gusts to 60 mph will be possible across the Sierras and the Kern County Mountains into adjacent areas of the Antelope Valley and the western half of the Owens Valley throughout the day. Other areas, such as the Banning Pass and Cleveland National Forest will see winds of 20-35 mph this afternoon. Some light rain will be possible later this morning into the afternoon across the Sierra Front Country and across the coastal plains and valleys. All rainfall amounts will be under a quarter of an inch. A dusting of snow will be possible in the Sierras above 7,000 ft. Temperatures will be 10-15 degrees below normal today and Friday with highs in the upper 40s and 50s in the mountains to the 70s in the valleys. Winds should drop off tonight over most areas, but some north and northwest winds will be possible late tonight into Friday across the I-5 Corridor and along the central coast into Santa Barbara County. This weekend, high pressure will approach the area, leading to much warmer and drier weather. Light offshore winds under 25 mph will be possible Sunday through Tuesday night. A warming trend will start on Saturday, and by Monday and Tuesday, valley temperatures will be back into the 90s. Minimum RH will drop into the 10-15% range over much of Southern California below 5,000 feet. Cooler weather may return toward the end of next week.
